Establishment of Vermi-compost Demo Unit under NABARD Project

Climate-related hazards have a big impact on the lives of people, especially the poor. Therefore, promoting climate resilient agriculture is needed to safeguard food security and a decent income for rural communities. Keeping these views to educate farmers about sustainable management of agriculture through awareness of Science and Technology in the era where climatic changes are inevitable, SAGE School of Agriculture established three Vermi-compost Demo Units funded by NABARD, Madhya Pradesh in the village of Imaliya, Kanasaiyan and Basia.

In this event Dr. Pankaj Shrivastava and Dr. Govind Gupta from SAGE University, Bhopal elaborated the preparation of vermin-compost and major important benefits of vermin-composting to increased agricultural productivity.

From The Field of SAGE University, Bhopal

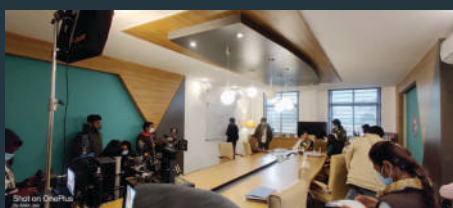

Healthy agriculture is very essential for a country's well-being; it's been the setting of some of the most exciting innovations in technology. To promote excellent education and research for development of sustainable agriculture, School of Agriculture initiated to grown organic vegetables and crops i.e. pea, carrot, turnip, ridged gourd, cucumber, fenugreek, chick pea, and wheat in the fields. This work is going smoothly under the guidance of Dr. Pankaj Srivastava and Dr. Govind Gupta.

From Polyhouse of SAGE University, Bhopal

Polyhouse is made of translucent material polyethylene where the plants grow and develop under controlled climatic conditions. To impart technical education about polyhouse farming to farmers and agripreneurs, School of Agriculture initiated to grow flowers like Gerbera and vegetables like Broccoli, Cabbage, Cauliflower, Chilly, Brinjal, Tomato, Coriander etc. in the poly-house at SUB campus.
