Reynolds Is Discontinuing Its Iconic Blue Cap Pen, Company Responds

Pen maker Reynolds has issued a clarification after a viral post on X (formerly Twitter) claimed that the company is discontinuing its iconic ball pen, the 045. The Reynolds 045 fine carbure pen, popularly known as the Sachin Tendulkar pen, has been a household staple in India for its affordability and longevity. The white body and blue cap was found in almost every student and teacher's pencil pouch. The pen still continues to enjoy unparalleled popularity even after years in the market. However, now a post on X called '90skid' suggested that Reynolds is discontinuing the manufacture of the iconic ball point pen. "Reynolds 045 Fine Carbure will no longer be available in market, end of an era.." read the post shared on Thursday.

This news certainly came as a jolt for many who have fond memories of the pen and are still using it. Several users on the microblogging site expressed their disbelief and remembered how it used to be the go-to pen, while others said that they would buy a bunch to keep as reminder of the good old days. Pen maker Reynolds has issued a clarification after a viral post on X (formerly Twitter) claimed that the company is discontinuing its iconic ball pen, the 045. However, Reynolds was quick to react to the viral news and clarify that it has no plans of stopping the 045 ball pen.

Tata in talks to buy

Haldiram's, Snack Maker eyes $10 billion valuation

Tata Group's consumer unit is in talks to buy at least 51% of popular Indian snack food maker Haldiram's but is not comfortable with the $10 billion valuation sought, two people briefed on the matter said. If successfully concluded, a deal would see the Indian conglomerate directly compete with Pepsi and billionaire Mukesh Ambani's Reliance Retail.

Haldiram's, a household name in India, is also talking with private equity firms including Bain Capital about the sale of a 10% stake, they said. Tata Consumer Products, which owns UK tea company Tetley and has a partnership with Starbucks in India, has baulked at the $10 billion valuation given that Haldiram's annual revenue is around $1.5 billion, the sources said.

Tata Consumer shares rose more than 4% in late Wednesday trade in Mumbai after Reuters reported news of the talks. The potential acquisition represents an exciting opportunity for Tata, the person said, adding: "Tata (Consumer) is seen as a tea company. Haldiram's is huge in the consumer space and has a wide market share." The sources spoke on condition of anonymity.

Tata's consumer unit, which also sells salt, pulses and mineral water, had revenue of $1.7 billion in the past financial year. It is a relatively small part of the Tata Group, whose businesses span autos, aviation and hotels and which had combined revenue last year of some $144 billion. Haldiram's Chairman Manohar Lal Agrawal last year told CNBC TV18 in an interview the company wanted to attract private equity investors and debut on the stock market in 2-3 years.

Haldiram's - which has multiple registered companies in the country - had revenue of at least $981 million in the financial year ended March 2022, according to regulatory filings. The first two sources, however, said its revenue is now close to $1.5 billion and annual operating profit is around $200 million.
